CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC. The Building of Character," (II Peter 4, 1-11: Jude zu, 21.)

BY AMOS R WELLS.
Character may be defined as the house in which we are to live forever. No one can build it for a man; every stroke must be also own. And for the rearing of this argument in home of ours we have only the see short years of our life on earth. It is wonderful that the first word in Peter's readerful programme for our work is Dill-

This bouse of ours is to have a foundation, which Peter names neat. Part of the foundation is under ground, of course, out of sight; that is Faith. There can be no bassiful, visible house of character withset an abiding, rock-firm confidence in the great, unseen realities of the universe, such as God, Christ, heaven, hell, the set an amountailty. And part of the humanition is above ground, that is Virtee, as uprightness of conduct that all mon can see and rejoke in Puter next enumerates knowledge. That is the framework that holds together our tracture of character. Many a man has more to pieces," as the saying is, beseen he bud a seal that was not accordtracture of character. Many a man has more to piece, as the saying is, beseen he bud a seal that was not accordto knowledge; he wanted to do things, set did not know how.

Transperance comes next—"self-control."

It the margin has it. That is the wall, festing out the cold, the storm, the robset the wolf. Some folks think it shuts pleasure also, but it does not. All the leasure that is worth while may come in heaven the floor.

Then Patience. And what can patience her the floors, those lowly beards over on the door.

And what can patience at the floors, those lowly beards over it the floors, those lowly beards over it me tramp, tramp, tramp, as we go t our dolly, humdram tasks. Let not beards creak! Cover these with eaville, so that people may not know they have a floored may become the most Godiness comes next; the roof, of course. Every house of character must have a side fronting heaven—every house that is, except those miserable abades that are constructed in the caves of self-stances, burrowing down into the perpetual dark! Then, connected with the roof, come the chimney and the hearth, the symbol of the household, and so the symbol of that characteristic which Peter names next—Love of the hrethren. No one can have such a character as we are describing

Love of the brethren. No one can have such a character as we are describing without loving all others that have the same character.

But there is something about a house that is more beautiful even than the fire of the household on the hearth, namely, the windows that let the firelight out to cheer the namers-by. And there is something in character more beautiful than love of the brethren, and that is love, love of all men, love that reaches to heaven and down to hell, and takes in the farthest darkest corner of the earth. Are we building our house of character? Yes, indeed; we cannot help building it: we are at work upon it every minute. But how are we building it? That is the question. Are we building seconding to the careless dictates of our selfish fancy, or according to this divine pattern that was shown Peter on the Holy mount?

careless dictates of our selfish fancy, or according to this divine pattern that was shown Peter on the Holy mount?

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON. For August 13. "Joelah and the Book

For August 13. "Josinh and the Book of the Law."

INTRODUCTION.—There is no break between the narrative of last lesson and that of the one appointed for to-day. We have merely an incident connected with the good work inaugurated by Josiah, the young King of Judah, who, after destroying every form of idolatry in his dominion, set himself resolutely to restore the temple to its original state and prepare for the ordinances of religion. The incident casts additional light on the condition of the country at the time and reflects great credit upon the King and his assistants in the good work of reform. It shows the cause of the national degeneracy, and the only true way to return to the old paths. The loss of the law of God explained every departure from the service of God, and the restoration of the sucred book to its original place of authority was a guaranty of the genetice and lofty desire of the ruler.

Discovery—(Verses H, E) A "book of the law of the Lord" was found in the tempts of Hillitah, the high priest. It had been neglected, perinage concealed beneath usuard articles in a room seldon visited. How long it had been in the overleaded place is not stated. Evidently no one carve much fee it. Religious observances had gone on in a perfunctory manner without much reference to the divine mairrections. But when the money, slowing gathered for repairing the temple, was brought out, the book was discovered. An old manuscript it was, given by the hand of Mouse or of his scribe, therefore himse centuries old. (Deut. xxii, 28.) The precious find was delivered to Shaphan, who had been appointed by the King to superinted the work of the tempte repair, and that official, true to the spirit of his master, read the book. (II Kings xxii, 8.) Turning over the dusty leaves of the old document, this man of God learned the requirements delivered by the great law-ing over the dusty leaves of the old document, this man of God learned the requirements delivered by the great law-ing over the dusty leaves of the old document, this man of God learned the requirements delivered by the great law-ing over the dusty leaves of the old document, this man of God learned the requirements delivered by the great law-ing over the dusty leaves of the old document, this man of God learned the requirements delivered by the great law-ing over the dusty leaves of the old document, this man of God learned the requirements delivered by the great law-ing over the dusty leaves of the old document, this man of God learned the requirements delivered by the great law-ing over the dusty leaves of the old document, this man of God learned the requirements delivered by the great law-ing over the dusty leaves of the old document, this man of God learned the requirements delivered by the great law-ing over the dusty leaves of the old document. The le ing over the dusty leaves of the old document, this man of God learned the requirements delivered by the great inspirer at the very beginning of national listory.

FAITHFULNESS—(Verses 16 and 11) Shaphan carried the book to Josiah, desiring him to know the contents of the old and long neglected volume. But on entering the King's presence he proceeded first of all to declare that the task assigned to him had been faithfully accomplished—the money stored up during the years had been brought forth and assigned to its appointed purpose. There were several good reasons for making this statement first of all. In this way he would set himself its good favor with his master. It is ever a matter of chief concern to know whether a servant has done that which was committed to him, for then only may he be trusted. He who comes with unfinished duty may well be doubted. Besides, this information prepared Shaphan to explain how he came in possession of the book. It was not found by searching for old reites to gratify curiosity, but in the discharge of a trust.

DISTRESS—(Verses 18 and 18). After reporting his faithful service Shaphan informed the king of the old book which had been found. He was honorable enough to give credit to Hilkinh as the finder. thereby investing the book with added interest masmuch as Hilkinh, the high priest, would be a sufficient guarantee of its genuiseness. Then producing the volume, Shaphan rend in it to Josiah. This was a faithful and kindly service, enjoined in the law itself. (Deut. xviii, 18) it was required from the very beginning of the monarchy that the kings should govern their conduct by the word of God. That alone was the rule of all royal proceedure. As Shaphan proceeded Jesiah was greatly departed from the law of God, and that in consequence punishment was impending. There is in every mind an expectation of wrath for wrongdoing. It was because of the righteous judgement that the king was distressed. Immediately the question came, "Is there any way of escape and if so, what is the way?
